Hailing from Denbigh in North Wales, Bryn Williams learnt to appreciate food and its origins from an early age. He would go shooting and fishing with his father and uncle, and worked in his local bakery learning the trade; from this point Bryn knew that cooking was integral to his future.

Bryn headed across the channel for his training, beginning with The Patisserie Millet in Paris and then the Hotel Negresco in Nice. Over the last 10 years Bryn has worked in some of the most prestigious kitchens in London and with some of the world's most stellar chefs. In 1997 he began work under Marco Pierre

White at The Criterion, went on to work under Michel Roux Jr at Le Gavroche for three years, was Senior-Sous at The Orrery for four years and then opened Galvin at Windows with Chris Galvin before moving to open Odette's for Vince Power in 2006 and buying the restaurant himself in 2008.

In 2006 Bryn was chosen to compete in the first series of the 'Great British Menu' on BBC1. Competing for Wales, Bryn triumphed with his fish course and went on to cook for the Queen's Birthday Banquet.

Bryn also appears regularly on the BBC's 'Saturday Kitchen', UKTV's 'Market Kitchen', BBC productions and Welsh TV food shows.
